any effort that can reduce the need to own and drive cars, or dependencies on cars to go anywhere, has to be considered before more roads are built or re-built on the assumption we are going to have ever more traffic. We already have too much land under pavement, which also emits carbon and heat! And with house prices pushing people out to more affordable accommodation, they need more affordable means of going to school, work and simply existing outside of areas that may provide walking/cycling access to a range of shopping and services.
